Hi Stella,

Did he take the TASC or GED or HiSet exam and pass while residing in Idaho? If so, then Idaho would have issued him a high school equivalency diploma.

If he had graduated high school in Idaho, then he would have a high school diploma from Idaho, which would not be changed to a New York State diploma had he moved. The same is the case with HSE diplomas. The state in which they reside at the time of testing is the state which issues the document. One cannot live in New York and take the exam in Idaho for it to be valid.

If he has scores from Idaho which did not earn a diploma, but are from the TASC exam, those can be imported to New York and he can complete the TASC here.

If he took an online exam, the GED, or HiSet, those scores are not accepted by New York State.

This is a bit complicated. Basically, if he lived in another state and earned a diploma, then that is his only diploma. If he did not complete the TASC, he can import his scores to New York.

Please feel free to follow up with questions.

Best,

Angela Midgley

Hi,

It looks like the student is a resident of nys but took the hse exam in Idaho. Does nys allow that?

Hello,

Eligible TASC applicants can test in whichever state they're a resident of.

Your e-mail, dated June 9th, tells us that the student most likely tested in the 1st week of June. After being scored, the student would need to send us an official transcript (in Idaho's HSE's unopened envelope), Attachment-I, and a $10 money-order.

Hi,

I am emailing from the City University of NY and we have a student who is a residence of NYS, but took the GED in June 2021 in Idaho.

Are students allowed to take the GED in other states even though they do not reside in that state and does NYS accept it? Please advise.
